NEED FOR BUILDINGS

In Washington the list of rented buildings is not as large as formerly, as many of the offices are now in the temporary structures erected during the war. But this situation is most precarious, it was pointed out today, as the health of thousands of employes is not properly guarded and the danger of loss of valuable records by fire is always present. If the income tax returns, for example, should be destroyed the loss would be more than the sum required to erect a modthan the sum required to erect a modern office building.

Preliminary reports show that in New York city alone the national government pays a rent bill of $1.566.726 a year, while in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago the sums also are large. In addition to the expense involved, the work of the government bureaus frequently is hampered because it is impossible to get all of a single unit housed in the same buildings.

> Arrives at New York From France Bearing Message of Good Will.

The plan to utilize the German securities is also before the Wilson administration, which is studying the legal points involved. But the undertaking is so far-reaching in importance and has such a vital bearing on exchange that New York bankers are eager to know how Senator Harding looks at the matter, so that there will be smooth sailing ahead in the event that a start is made before March 4.

The securities were originally held by Germans resident in the United NEW YORK, November 23 .- Jean Jules Jusserand, French ambassador to the United States, arrived here today on the steamship La Savole after a stay of several months abroad. The ambassador left here July 3 Germans resident in the United States or American corporations and business houses in which the majority of the stock was German owned. These securities have been held in trust during the war, and along with other arms. for a vacation trip, which was inter-rupted when he was sent to Warsaw as a member of the French mission. The ambassador, accompanied by Mme. Jusserand, was met at the pler by Maurice Casenave, French high commissioner to the United States, and Gaston Liebert, consul general in President Wilson has declined to New York. The Jusserands planned to go to Washington today. M. Jusserand declared he returned erty until America signed a peace treaty with Germany and said treaty was ratified by the Senate. One of the chief argumnts against the Knox resolution for a separate peace was that it did not bind Germany, and that only by a separate agreement or treaty with Germany could an understanding be reached concerning such questions as German property in the United States or claims growing out of the sinking of the Lusitania.

But the depression in export trade a peace to this country with the same mes-d treaty sage that the first French ambassador One of brought—"A message of good will and a credit for German purchases is believed by its authors to be the best way to start the ball rolling toward better conditions in the exchange market generally.

Considerable pressure is being brought to bear upon the Wilson administration to approve the plan irrespective of what the ultimate fate of the peace treaty may be. Mr. Wilson's determination during the last session of Congress was to insist upon the ratification of the treaty before taking up all other questions with Germany growing out of the war.

Think Plan is Workable.

Some of those who favor the building of an American syndicate believe Some of those who favor the building of an American syndicate believe the German securities could be invested legally by the United States government in such a corporation as government in such a corporation as is permitted by the Edge law, and that the right still exists to invest pertinent tenor of the sentiments expressed by Walter Simons, the German minister of foreign affairs. George N. Barnes, the British labor delegate, has openly expressed a desire to see Germany enter. Although he says that this represents his own opinion and that of British labor, it is nevertheless supposed to reflect almost exactly the British point of view as a whole. The question seems to be German securities in any way that the American government—the trustee—sees fit. Others think a wiser plan would be to obtain the permission of the German owners of the securities, and it is stated that this permission the German owners of the securities, and it is stated that this permission is already assured, because by such a scheme Germany would be able to buy at once needed commodities.

Just what England and France might say about the establishment of such a credit in favor of Germany which might tend to give Germany risw materials that France, for example, may be anxious to get, but is unable to do so without similar credit arrangements, is hard to say. The free to discriminate in favor of Germany, considering the fulfill ment of the treaty as a separate proposition. But the treaty provides for this contingency, staling clearly that guaranties are necessary. Hence an alteration of the league covenant will at the moment.

Since the defeat of the peace treaty the association with the allied governments has suffered more or less and the tendency among exporters had been to get trade wherever possible without thought of war hatred. The expected coolness in trade relations, a symptom of which was the agitation against the purchase of Germany.

America has been handicapped in a resumption of trade by the defeat of the Polish corridor.

Opinion of Justice Brandels. In announcing the dissenting opin ion in the case, Mr. Justice Brandeis held as follows: "It has long been the established practice of the federal courts that even in criminal cases the presiding judge may comment freely on the evi-dence and express his opinion whether the facts alleged have been true. Since Sparf vs. the United States, 156 U. S., 51, it is settled that in criminal cases it is the duty of a jury to apply the law given them by the presiding judge to the facts which they find.

After quoting the remarks of the judge in the lower court, Mr. Justice Brandels continued:

"In my opinion such a charge is a moral command, and, being yielded to, substitutes the will of the judge for the conviction of the jury. The laws which in a criminal case forbids a verdict directed in so many words, forbids such a statement as above.

A large percentage of the clerks have been backward about giving information concerning rent charges. Mr. Libbey said today. Fear of further rent raises and possible eviction from their homes has kept a large number of the federal employes from promptly returning the subcommittee's questionnaires.

The subcommittee has assured the clerks, however, that all returns will be presented to the examining body or bodies without the provised that they shall be kept a secret until come positive action is taken for housing relief.

Tables showing the percentage of increase in rents charged federal employes in Washington during the past three years will be drawn up from the data compiled by the subcommittee Friday.
